CHECK FIRST

Push a finger about an inch into the soil. If it feels dry, water. If it is still damp, write the date you checked and wait.

IN WINTER

Plants usually grow more slowly in the dark months and use less water, so check more often and water only when the soil says so.

HOW TO FILL IT

Write the plant and its spot once. Then add a date each time you water and a note when a leaf, a drip or a bug catches your eye.

Growing information only, not medical or veterinary advice. Care lines are broad starting points: your plant's own tag and your own light come first. Free for personal use.

Cut on the dashed line. Fold in half and tie it on, slip it into a picture frame by the plant, or keep it in your binder.

WHAT TO WRITE

Keep each line short enough to read from a step away: the window, one water rule, one thing to avoid. For the pet note, look the plant up on the ASPCA list and write what it says, then add "not veterinary advice".

HOUSEPLANT CARE TRACKER

This free page tracks every plant on one sheet. The full Houseplant Care Tracker gives each plant its own page for light, water check, feeding and repot history, and adds:

- The finger test and the pot-weight test, with a table that says what each result means
- Six winter care changes and a 12-month watering and feeding log
- A quick reference for 20 common houseplants with the ASPCA pet listing and a source on every line
- A problem finder for yellow leaves, drooping, brown tips and fungus gnats
